

Boston Friday,

Dear Parke,

I have your letter, & shall be down Monday morning I return Monday night we should come Saturday, only the house would be so full, I know not of any good we could do. If there is any thing we can bring down, or do in town let us know.

I wish old Mr Norton would be got. For with all manner of charity & forwings for little cockey Perkins, I dont want him to have any thin' to do with him dead. However I suppose this is a thought which will not enter into the minds of either Aunt Priscilla or Aunt Phoebe, in the absorbing affliction that ^{that} will of necessity be in. I am very glad to hear they are so composed but I know it would be so, naturally. The difference between 16 & 60 in its reception of death, is marked. Experience will do its work on the inexperienced souls. After all the occupation of event is over, I do wish Aunt Priscilla could be persuaded to try a change of scene.

Pray try to dispose her mind to admit the idea. Lucia and Emma are awaiting orders. They both felt a good deal, as you would expect. Nothing interesting transpires. I have got off a good many letters touching the fair &c.
& one first rate to Dr Coan touching Mr Adams lectures. You do not say how Aunt Mary is. I hope comfortable as the circumstances of the case will admit. The occasion is one ~~that should be felt~~^{to the sense of} - not suffered. For as to deprivation, the consideration of the shortness of life should be powerful enough to abate that. All goes on well at Roxbury. Money is somewhat easier, Henry interpolates, when I ask ~~you~~ if there is any news. ^{I think with reference to the Mammoth} You had better write for me, to save the wear & tear of her unaccustomed constitution a Ma letter, & get her to copy it. I think the effort of writing would look so dreadful to her that she won't fetch unless so set a-going.

In haste yours truly
A. W. Adams
